TOWARDS THE OLYMPICS

THE Winfield Socceroos 3-0 win over Chinese Taipei in Taipei on November 15 last provides the backdrop for the assault to secure a place in the Olympic Games football tournament finals in Seoul in September.

Graham Arnold scored twice and Frank Farina once against an opponent that has developed considerably over the past two years.

The return game takes place on February 28.

Despite every reason for confidence in future performances, the brain drain to overseas means that Australia will have to fight every inch of the way for success.

Of this coach Frank Arok and his assistant Eddie Thomson are quite certain.

The basis of a fine squad is in place and plenty of zest will be required in defence and midfield particularly.

Israel is claiming — but probably prematurely — that their overseas stars will be released to play in the qualifying rounds in Australia and New Zealand in March.

FIFA regulations only call for 48 hours notice for players to be released to national teams. However if Avi Cohen (Glasgow Rangers) is not commanding a first team club spot he could be here.

Others in question are Eli Ohana (Mechelen, Belgium), Ronnie Rosenthal (FC Bruges, Belgium), and David Pisanti (QPR, England).

Australia's Eddie Kmcevic (Anderlecht, Belgium) has been sidelined with illness. It will be extremely difficult to have Jim Patikas (AEK, Greece) and David Mitchell (Feyenoord, Holland) released.

New Zealand's squad will be as eager as ever to dispose of their across-the-Tasman brothers.

The fortunate point is that the Olympic Games does not call for the winner to face a South American opponent, which is the case with the World Cup.

The West Samoans are due to meet Chinese Taipei on March 2, with the latter unbeatable favourites.

The roster for the first qualifying round is:

March 6: Olympic Park, Melbourne
Australia v Israel, New Zealand v Chinese Taipei

March 9: Hindmarsh Stadium, Adelaide
Australia v Chinese Taipei, Israel v New Zealand

March 13: Sydney Football Stadium
Australia v New Zealand, Israel v Chinese Taipei

In New Zealand the centres will be: March 20, Christchurch; March 23, Wellington; March 27, Auckland.

New Zealand's 7-0 and 12-0 wins over Western Samoa were against island opposition, but there is no doubt that the All Whites are in great heart.

IFK Gothenburg

IFK Gothenburg, are now amongst European Soccer's elite, having won the UEFA Cup twice in the past six years, as well as being the current Swedish champions.

They have long been the most popular club in Sweden — even though both local rivals Örgryte and Malmö have won the Swedish Championship on more occasions than them and, in the nation's FA Cup, Malmö and AIK Stockholm have enjoyed a greater number of successes.

IFK's popularity stems from their tradition of always attempting to play top quality football and inconsistency which, though often exasperating, has ensured that life is seldom dull for the club's supporters.

Formed in 1903, IFK won the Swedish Championship in their very first year, IFK became the first team from Sweden to win a major European trophy when thrashing the newly crowned West German Champions SV Hamburg 4-0 on aggregate in the two legged final. It was a remarkable accomplishment for a team of semi-professionals.

Full time professional Soccer is not financially viable in Sweden and all of the leading players based in the country have occupations outside the game. Their combined earnings from football and other employment is often considerable but much less than the riches which can be gained by full time professionals in some other Western European nations.

It was, therefore, inevitable that IFK's first UEFA Cup winning side should break up. Key players Glenn Hysén, Glenn Strömberg and Dan Cornilliusson were lured away to PSV Eindhoven (Holland), Benfica (Portugal) and Corno (Italy) respectively. Even more damaging were the losses of Nilsson to Kaiserslautern (West Germany) and coach Sven-Göran Eriksson to Benfica.

Amazingly, the club's rebuilding program was so swift and efficient that they reached the 1985-86 European Champions' Cup semi-final (where the Swedes were desperately unlucky in losing to Barcelona after winning the first leg 3-0) and regained the UEFA Cup last May.

The latest UEFA Cup triumph has not, as yet, brought such a dramatic loss of personnel however Glenn Hysén, after returning from his unproductive stint in Holland, is now seeking further fame in Italy with Fiorentina and tall Finnish striker Jan Rantanen has moved to the somewhat less exotic environment offered by English second division club Leicester City.

Moreover, they will be eager for meaningful games to gain match fitness before the commencement of the 1988 Swedish domestic season in April.

Olympic Value

IFK, then, will be one yielding team that definitely will not be here purely as tourists and should provide the Soccerosa with an ideal preparation for Olympic battles ahead.

IFK Gothenburg's most recent international triumph came in May 1987. After two tough matches against Scotland's Dundee United in the final of the UEFA Cup, IFK emerged as winners for the second time in 6 years.

This victory was yet another highlight in the club's string of successes during the 1980's, topped naturally enough by these UEFA Cup wins of 1982 and 1987.

SKF

Bearings — and much more

A short history

SKF, the world's largest and best known manufacturer of ball and roller bearings owes its origins to a young Swedish engineer.

In 1905, Sven Wingquist, a maintenance engineer at a Gothenburg textile plant was having serious problems with imported ball bearings used to support overhead power shafts. Quality and delivery were poor. Stoppages were frequent and expensive.

To Wingquist, the only way to ensure continuous production of high quality bearings was to manufacture them in Sweden.

His directors agreed and in 1907, SKF was established to manufacture and market the new double-row, self-aligning bearing.

Today SKF is a world-wide group of 2000 companies and 71 factories in most countries of the world.

In Australia, the first agency for SKF products was appointed in 1908.

In 1925 sales offices were opened in Melbourne and Sydney.

Today the company employs almost 200 people and has sales offices in all State capitals, with headquarters in Melbourne. SKF products are also available through a nationwide network of authorised distributors.

- A complete range of ball and roller bearings
- Bearing housings and associated components
- Bearing mounting and dismounting equipment
- Preventative maintenance systems
- Measuring equipment
- Lubrication systems and lubricants
- Automotive and Industrial Oil Seals
- Adhesives and Sealants
